| Aim of the Course           | This course is designed to give a critical look at the relationship between population and socioeconomic development. The major questions include the following: what is the nature of the relationship between population growth and socioeconomic development? How does population size and growth affect socioeconomic development and vice versa? The course will give students theoretical knowledge in population problems and tendencies of contemporary global development taking place in Europe; the noted course will help students to study economic, social, demographic, geographic, environmental, cultural, political and other factors affecting economic and social development in Europe and in today's world. The specific topics that relate population growth and change to social and economic aspects are: population dynamics, population migration, population aging, urbanization processes, the European migratory system, migration policy of the states importing and exporting labour resources, socio-economic development and development planning. |

| Teaching method               | Lectures and seminars are the basic form of the teaching course. Students are required to prepare theoretical materials, solve tasks, tests, exercises and others throughout the semester. At the lectures they also will have the opportunity to participate in debates of the discussed questions. During semester two mid-term written exams are to be conducted and evaluated by scores.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | lectures and seminars, participation in the written tests and seminars, examinations at the end of the teaching course. Mid term examinations are to be conducted in written form and given in two questions. The first question is theoretical and the second one – a task or a test. Seminars are to be conducted basically in oral form using tests and tasks actively. For admission to the final examination a student is required to have scored at least 11 points.

Evaluation components are presented in the following form:

|                                |      |
|--------------------------------|------|
| Attendance                     | 5%   |
| Seminars (class work)          | 35%  |
| Presentation of Research Topic | 10%  |
| Mid-term Exam 1                | 10%  |
| Mid-term Exam 2                | 10%  |
| Final examination              | 30%  |
| Final evaluation               | 100% |

During the period of the teaching course and at the examinations students are evaluated by the following criteria:

- 91-100 __ Excellent (A)
- 81-90 __ Very good (B)
- 71-80 __ Good (C)
- 61-70 __ Medium (D)
- 51-60 __ Satisfactory (E)
- 41-50 __ Non-satisfactory (FX)
- 0-40 __ Failed (F)
